this week in talks with the Belgians and British on the Congo. I had a briefing session with our own experts on this subject this morning. Lunched at 1 Carlton Gardens, as guest of Selwyn Lloyd. This luncheon was in honor of Douglas Dillon, and included Bob Roosa and other Treasury associates.

George Carey came to see me this afternoon. He and Peggy have just arrived for the wedding later in the week of her son, George Hambleton. Jock Whitney called here today. He looked splendidly, and we had a congenial talk.

More briefing this afternoon on the Congo.

Tonight, we had a dinner that seemed to go unusually well. The guests were:

Viscount and Viscountess Hailsham
The Belgian Ambassador and Mme. de Thier
Lord and Lady Nugent
Sir David and Lady Eccles
Mr. Anthony and Lady Violet Powell
Prince and Princess Radziwill
Mr. and Mrs. Cavendish
Mr. and Mrs. Heinz
Mr. Cecil Beaton
Lady Moyra Hamilton
Mr. Jeremy Tree
Mr. and Mrs. Archibald Roosevelt

Lord Hailsham is supposed to be able to answer any question on any thing, but he stuck this evening on the tale of Little Red Riding Hood. It was odd that no one present knew the whole story. It seems there are two versions, the original with an unhappy, and the one we learned as children, with a more cheerful ending.

Messrs. Wayne Fredericks, Ford of the Legal Division of State, Bill Buffum, Joe Wagner, and David Newsom accompanied me to the Foreign Office this morning, where we commenced our Congo talks, under the chairmanship of Lord Dundee. The Belgian Ambassador was there, but the real spokesman of the Belgian delegation was my accomplished friend, Bob Rothschild. When Spaak returned as
